

New Testament References to Daniel

Copyright © 2006 by Frank W. Hardy, Ph.D.

[Note: This was an early article in the Historicism print publication. I would do some of it differently now, but the data listings appear below pretty much the way they appeared at first.]

The idea of compiling a list of New Testament references to Daniel started as a compilation of marginal notes from Bibles that I own and had studied from. When the list was assembled I decided to expand it by including the references proposed by an appendix to the United Bible Societies Greek New Testament.¹

Unfortunately no theory is yet available--to the UBS editors or myself--that would make it possible to say with assurance when a writer is or is not referring to another's work. It is hard to say, for example, when an inspired New Testament writer has an Old Testament passage in mind as he writes and when what he writes merely suggests that passage to us as we read. I suspect that all we can do with this problem is pose it. No solution is expected because the information needed would involve knowing an ancient writer's state of mind as he wrote.

There is no question that New Testament authors frequently wrote with a given Old Testament passage in mind. The New Testament is filled with such references. The problem is knowing when and to what extent this occurred. At one end of the spectrum Matt 21:16 quotes Ps 8:3 LXX word for word. It is safe to say that Matthew had the passage in mind as he quoted it. Similarly, the use of Isa 38:31-34 LXX (Isa 31:31-34) in Heb 8:8-12 is a quotation, even though not every word is the same. In some cases there is a question whether the later writer intends to quote a given passage or not. Thus, in Rev 1:7 there is a certain awareness of Dan 7:13, whether or not the Revelator had to be thinking of it directly in order to write what he did. Sometimes it is clear that no quotation is intended, but a strong exegetical link nevertheless binds two passages together, as for example the descriptions of a hostile power found in 2 Thess 2:3-4 and in Dan 7:25. Other times a New Testament passage is merely of interest in the context of one from the Old Testament without any implication at all that the two are related. See Luke 12:32 and Dan 7:27.

In the present paper the subjective nature of dealing with such a range of possibilities is accepted as inevitable. In fact it may be misleading even to ask the question whether a writer "did or did not" have a given passage in mind, as though his awareness of it had to be all on or all off. Degrees of awareness should also be taken into account. For this reason each proposed New Testament reference to Daniel that appears in the listings below is rated on a scale of 1 to 3, where 1 indicates a relatively strong relationship and 3 a relatively weak one. Let 1 indicate that a New Testament writer probably had the indicated passage from Daniel consciously in mind as he wrote, let 2 indicate a lack of certainty as to whether this was the case, and let 3 indicate that there was in all likelihood no thought of Daniel on the part of the New Testament writer but only a similarity of subject matter.

All references proposed in the three available editions of the UBS Greek text are included below, whether or not I agree they are relevant. The first edition of the UBS Greek text contains only two suggested references that are not also contained in the second edition.

These are Dan 10:6 in relation to Rev 2:18 and Dan 10:6 in relation to Rev 19:12. Otherwise the lists provided by the first two editions are identical.

The third edition, however, illustrates an entirely different editorial philosophy in regard to relationships between Old and New Testament passages. Only five allusions to Daniel by New Testament writers are recognized there. All involve Dan 7:13, to which Matt 24:30; 26:64; Mark 13:26; 14:62; and Luke 21:27 are compared--all from the synoptic gospels and each involving the expression "Son of man."

The difference just noted between the first two editions of the UBS Greek text and the third is instructive. In editions 1 and 2 everything that might possibly have some bearing on a passage in Daniel is included--however remote it might be, while in edition 3 everything is excluded that cannot be firmly established as an unequivocal literary citation. It could be argued that the editors went too far in both cases, including too much in editions 1 and 2 and leaving out legitimate references in edition 3.

There are four columns in each of the following listings.² The whole body of material is sorted (1) with the references from Daniel as the first column, then (2) with the corresponding references from the New Testament as the first column, next (3) with an indication of which edition(s) of the UBS Greek text support the reference as the first column, and finally (4) with an indication of how strong a connection exists, in my personal judgment, between the two references as the first column. Using the above numbering scheme the four sorting orders are 1234, 2134, 3214, and 4321.

Corrections and suggestions are invited. If there is sufficient interest a revised and updated listing will be published in a future issue of Historicism. When using the listings bear in mind that they are not in themselves a New Testament exegesis of Daniel but only raw material for one. Thus, they are an appropriate tool for exegesis but not an appropriate substitute for it.
